LIBN: Harassment April 2018

When an employee comes forward with a sexual harassment complaint, it's important for companies to take immediate action, attorneys and HR pros say.

"It's incumbent on the company to conduct a swift, decisive investigation," said Larry Martinez, partner and co-chair of the labor and employment practice group at Meltzer Lippe in Mineola.

Most companies have anti-harassment policies, but many are not adept at responding appropriately to a complaint.

On February 7, 2018 a preliminary injunction was issued against the Town of Oyster Bay, preventing the Town from enforcing apprenticeship program requirements as set forth in the Town Code against private construction projects for the duration of the case.

In a decision of significant economic consequence to every contractor who operates in the Town of Oyster Bay, Meltzer Lippe's Labor & Employment legal team previously won a temporary restraining order against the Town of Oyster Bay, which last September passed an ordinance which imposed a new requirement on contractors and developers seeking to perform work for which a permit is required on commercial properties of 100,000 square feet or more. The Federal Court extended the TRO into the preliminary injunction. This permits all contractors to work on wholly private construction projects of any size within the Town regardless of whether they are affiliated with an apprenticeship program which meets the Town's new requirements.

Meltzer Lippe's litigation and the court's decision has been recognized as a key victory and is strongly supported by Long Island businesses. Both the Association for a Better Long Island and the Long Island Builders Institute have issued public statements supporting the litigation and court's decision. The complex web of laws governing the employer-employee relationship is expected to spin in a new direction under the Trump administration. And that's good news for employers - and not such good news for workers.

LIBN: Suits and armor

The news is full of stories about companies shelling out millions for employment-related lawsuits. Within the last month, for instance, manufacturer United Plastics and staffing agency ASI Group were ordered to pay $1.4 million in back wages and damages to 566 employees in Massachusetts and Mississippi that were illegally denied overtime. Z Foods, a national dried fruit processor, had to cough up $1.5 million in damages in a sexual harassment and retaliation lawsuit

Producers of the Broadway hit “Hamilton” came under fire recently for advertising for “nonwhite” performers. The hip-hop musical about America’s founding fathers features Latino and African-American performers in most of the prominent roles.

While it’s common practice to state the race, gender and age range of the character that the actor will play, in most cases employers cannot hire people based on their race, gender, age or any other protected characteristic

LIBN: In reference to references April 2016

When it comes to giving references for former employees, if you don’t have anything nice to say, it’s best not to say anything at all. Giving employee references - even positive ones - can land companies in court, leading attorneys to recommend that employers set and adhere to strict reference policies.
